“ A candle to give just the perfect amount of light as you kick back next to your own private pond in heaven just waiting on that perfect bite from that perfect catfish. I'll never forget the time we stopped, on the way to the catfish pond in Kentucky, to get hot wings. Of course, Jed had to get the hottest ones on the menu! As his face turned bright red, the sweat started pouring off of his forehead; eventually soaking his shirt, and the tears streamed down his face. As he gasped for breath he said, " Not so bad. I..I..I..could eat a few more." I felt so bad for him, but couldn't help but laugh just a little giggle. He always wanted to be the center of attention and wanted nothing more in this world but to be loved, feel important, and feel as if he belonged in whatever surroundings he found himself.

Jed...I know that you were sometimes misunderstood and that you didn't understand certain things in life and how you really affected people and how others perceived you; however,... You were very much loved. You were a very important person not only in my life, but in this world, and baby boy.... You belonged here with us; you still do! You left us way too soon! You will be greatly missed! With a broken heart and tear filled eyes, I will pray for your soul and for Aunt Norma to feel the arms of our loving Father above comforting her as she lays to rest yet another of her loving family members. They are all going home, it seems, ever so quickly. I love you Norma; always have and always will!

With all my love and admiration,
Heather Baldwin Crabtree
