“ For as long as I could remember, you sent me a new Belle costume for Halloween every year because you knew how much I love beauty and the beast. Even if mama told me I had to be something else that year. We played with magnifying glasses and styrofoam cups when you came to visit. You chased me around my play kitchen when I wanted to play tag. For my 6th grade graduation I begged to ride with you to the ceremony and got a smudge on my dress from the dust in your truck on the way there. I still have that dress. With the dust on it from the shifter brushing me. When I visited you in Virginia as a kid you got us all up one night and gave us jars so we could chase fireflies around the yard with you as we tried to catch them and watch them light up. You gave me more popsicles than I actually needed the whole visit and pushed me on a swing that felt like it went clear over the road as cars passed by. You even joined in on the water gun fights with us grandkids in the yard. I remember every visit. Gvgeyu, agiduda. Wado, Unelanvhi. Otsaliheliga.

“ I remember when I was a little girl trying to teach my dad to read. I had my little See Spot Run book and I was reading it to Dad and teaching him how to pronounce the words. I remember Daddy taking us to Astroworld and buying us Melli Yellows while we rode in his big ole truck. I remember how he used to put me on his shoulders and carry me around while he was walking with his work stilts. I remember how he taught me how to catch fireflies, I remember the fortune cookies he would buy us. I remember how when it was just me and him a few years back living on Buffalo. I would go to work and come in expecting to cook and Dad surprised me with having already cooked dinner for me. I'll never forget how he would say "Tabitha honey," every time he wanted to talk to me. My Daddy was little but he was a giant in so many ways. In fact that's what I called him when I was little, my little Daddy. I'll never forget you my Little Daddy, you taught me so much even when you thought I wasn't listening. I love you so much and I will miss you for everyday of the rest of my life. You worked so hard all your life, so rest now Daddy. Be at peace and know that your memory and legacy continues on with all of us left behind. I love you Daddy!

“ My granddad was a man of many interests but few words. He definitely loved his family, and went through all sorts of jobs to support them and give them a good life. I'll love him and miss him always, but he will live on through me and his other grandchildren.
